PART III: ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY 203

PREFACE

This directory has been compiled under the auspices of the Office for Civil Rights to alert elementary and secondary level regular class teachers to resources that will assist them in accommodating students with physical and mental handicaps. These resources are:

- Inservice training opportunities;
- The network of national, state, and local agencies and organizations that are sources of materials, services, and technical assistance; and
- Literature and media on educational services for handicapped students.

The directory is divided into three parts. The first identifies national resources which provide information, literature on handicapping conditions, equipment, and/or inservice education. Part II is a state-by-state listing of inservice training programs for teachers; state agencies; service and consumer organizations; and directories of services. A bibliography of texts and of materials for inservice workshops is presented in Part III.

Much of this information on agencies, organizations, directories, and literature has been extracted from the 1977 TERC publication, Guidance, Counseling and Support Services for High School Students with Physical Disabilities, which was developed under a grant from the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped. Texts concerning instructional services for mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed students were selected and annotated by Lynn Smarte of the Council for Exceptional Children. The inservice training program information was obtained in October-November, 1977, by surveying State Departments of Education, postsecondary institutions, projects funded by the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, and certain service organizations.

PART I

NATIONAL RESOURCES

This section identifies organizations and directories which are national in scope. While school personnel are probably more likely to refer to state and local organizations and directories for information and assistance, they should not overlook national organizations and directories as potential resources.

National Organizations

Listed here are voluntary health organizations, consumer organizations, and other national organizations concerned with handicapped persons. Each entry is briefly annotated.

Contacting national organizations can benefit teachers seeking information on specific handicapping conditions and related topics, since most organizations distribute print and audiovisual materials. Some organizations are sources of instructional materials, and others may offer consultation and/or inservice training programs. The address of your nearest chapter or affiliate can be obtained from the national organization.

Please note the following about the organizations listed:

- A position or office noted beneath the address indicates where to direct an initial inquiry: e.g.,

	Muscular Dystrophy Association 810 Seventh Avenue New York, New York 10019
Direct your initial inquiry to ——————→	Director of Patient and Community Service

- Fees for materials and services are not always indicated.
- "Referral," as used here, indicates that the organization provides information about specific facilities and services; "referral" does not imply that the organization will actually make the referral.

- Direct services listed may be offered by state/local affiliates and not necessarily by the national office. In most cases this has been noted in each entry.

National Directories

Some national directories of services and materials have been included in order to expand the amount of potential information available to the reader and to assist the reader in locating national organizations which are not listed in our National Organizations section.

Date of publication, number of pages (where known), cost, source, and annotations are cited for each entry. Since most of the directories are revised fairly regularly, it is advisable to inquire about the current edition when ordering a copy. Also, remember that prices are subject to change.

PART II

STATE RESOURCES*

Presented in this section are the following state and local resources, arranged by state:

- Inservice training programs
- State agencies
- Service and consumer organizations
- Directories of services

These resources can be helpful in program planning and implementation and can contribute to the quality of school services delivered to handicapped students. We urge school personnel to make optimal use of available resources.

Inservice Training Programs

These are workshops, conferences, institutes, courses, consultation, and literature offered to educational personnel to assist them in providing an appropriate education to handicapped children. Numerous topics are addressed, such as P.L. 94-142, individualized education programs (IEPs), nondiscriminatory testing, and curriculum methods and materials. The programs may meet once, several times, or for the entire school year; for the most part, they are not degree-granting programs (although some of the courses may be taken for credit).

Each entry is arranged by name of the sponsoring institution or organization and provides the address, contact person, title of the program, and a brief description. Where there is an incomplete entry, contact the program sponsor for further information. A sample entry is presented on the next page. The description of the program includes the following information:

*Although we have identified many valuable resources here, it should be made clear that this is not a comprehensive listing--all inservice programs, agencies, organizations, and directories are not included. Inclusion does not imply endorsement of the resource, nor does exclusion imply disapproval. For the most part, inclusion indicates a response to our survey questionnaire.

- Title. Please note that in many entries the program title may be a generic one, covering various workshops, courses, etc. on numerous topics.

- Active or planned. Active indicates that the program is currently operating; planned indicates that the program will be offered in the near future or that it will be conducted pending funding.

- Grade level - preschool, elementary, secondary.

- Types and lengths of programs. Ongoing implies a program which meets throughout the school year; short-term implies one meeting, several meetings over a few weeks, summer programs, and other similar time configurations. Types of programs include conferences, workshops, courses, consultation on as-needed basis, and distribution of pertinent literature to school personnel.

- Topics covered. These may be topics covered in one course or topics covered in a number of separate workshops, seminars, etc. (The abbreviation IEP refers to individualized education program.)

- Handicapping conditions addressed in the program. Abbreviations used for each handicap are:

  CH - Chronic health problems (e.g., diabetes, cardiac condition)
  ED - Emotionally disturbed
  HI - Hearing impaired
  LD - Learning disabled
  MR - Mentally retarded
  OI - Neuromuscular/orthopedically impaired (e.g., muscular dystrophy, cerebral palsy)
  VI - Visually impaired

  All handicaps indicates that all of the above handicapping conditions are addressed. If handicaps in addition to the ones above are covered, they are listed separately, for example, all handicaps, language impaired.

  If respondents added qualifying comments, the comments follow in parentheses, for example, all handicaps (mild).

  If a program discusses issues common to the education of all handicapped children, without focusing on specific handicapping conditions, the term generic is used.

- Eligibility criteria:

  - Participants

  - Geographical area. Interested persons should scan listings in other states as well as their state because many programs are

School personnel should note the availability of inservice training institutes sponsored by the national Council for Exceptional Children and offered in a number of locations. (See National Organizations, page 11 for more information.)

State Agencies

The State Department of Education and the Vocational Rehabilitation (VR) agency are identified for every state. Teachers may already be aware of the assistance which their State Department of Education can provide, such as program guidelines, instructional aids, career planning materials, and inservice workshops.

Although the Division of Special Education is identified here, teachers may also want to contact other divisions within their State Department of Education, such as Vocational-Technical or Occupational Education (names vary). Each state has personnel who deal specifically with the occupational education of special needs students.

Also concerned with vocational planning is the state VR agency, which administers the State-Federal program of vocational services to handicapped persons. In some states the VR is divided into two units, one serving visually impaired persons and the other serving persons with other handicaps. Both are listed here.

VR services include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Diagnosis and evaluation (medical, vocational and psychosocial) of rehabilitation potential
- Guidance, counseling, and referral
- Vocational and other postsecondary training, including training materials

- Job placement
- Occupational licenses, tools, and equipment
- Medical restoration services, e.g., prostheses, visual services
- Subsistence maintenance during rehabilitation
- Interpreter and reader services for deaf and blind persons respectively
- Telecommunications, sensory and other technological aids and devices
- Transportation related to any rehabilitation services

Eligibility for VR services is based upon: (a) the presence of a physical or mental handicap; (b) the existence of a substantial handicap to employment; and (c) a reasonable expectation that vocational rehabilitation services may render the individual fit to engage in a gainful occupation. It is important to note that age is also a criterion of eligibility, and the minimum age requirement varies from state to state. In some states high school students may be eligible for services in their senior or junior year while in other states they may not. In any case, students of sufficient age to be making vocational plans may be able to obtain information from the VR agency, even if they are not eligible to receive services.* For example, a student might be able to obtain information on sources of low vision aids and other assistive equipment.

VR agencies and local educational agencies in some states collaborate to plan and provide appropriate services to high school students who are VR clients. In a number of states formal cooperative agreements exist between the VR agency and the LEA, such as: assigning a VR counselor to a particular school district to identify potential VR clients and assist them in receiving services; and coordinating work experience programs for students with handicapping conditions.

* For information pertaining to younger students, school personnel can contact their State Department of Education.

Service and Consumer Organizations

Included here are numerous state, and some local, affiliates of service organizations (such as United Cerebral Palsy Associations, National Easter Seal Society for Crippled Children and Adults), consumer organizations (such as an association of deaf persons), and other organizations considered to be potential resources.

Such organizations concerned with handicapped persons can often be valuable sources of assistance to school personnel. Among the services the organizations may provide are: print and audiovisual materials focusing on various aspects of a particular handicapping condition, including materials designed specially for use in schools; referral to other agencies for needed assistance; direct services to handicapped students (ranging from loan of equipment and provision of transportation to personal counseling and recreational programs); and consultation with school personnel, usually on an informal basis, regarding specific situations or more general issues. Services of organizations vary; it is important that school personnel contact the organization to ascertain the type and degree of assistance which can be provided. (Please note that some state organizations have local chapters to which inquirers will be directed and that some organizations listed here serve certain areas of a state, rather than the entire state.)

If a state affiliate of a national organization is not listed for a particular state, this does not necessarily mean that no affiliate exists in that state; if the address cannot be found in a phone directory or a directory of services, contact the national office of the organization. For example, state chapters of the Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf are not listed here. Teache seeking interpreting services should consult the national office of the organizati (see page 27) for the address of the chapter in their state.

Directories of Services

For some states, we have identified directories which offer information about handicap-related resources (e.g., consumer organizations, rehabilitation centers, sources of equipment). Ordering address and cost, as well as a brief annotation, are provided. Since some directories are updated regularly, school personnel should request the most recent edition when ordering and should inquire about price changes.

PART III

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY

The materials identified here are primarily teacher-oriented and focus either on specific instructional techniques for students with a particular handicapping condition or on educational practices (e.g., individualized instruction) useful in classrooms accommodating students with various handicaps. We have also included career and educational counseling materials as well as several resources for administrators and school personnel who are responsible for planning inservice training programs. The formats vary: most are texts, some are workshop packages which include audiovisuals and texts, and a few are bibliographies.

Included in each bibliographic entry is the cost and source for purchasing. Some of the materials may be available from a large public library or a university library. (If you do not have borrowing privileges at these libraries, your school or community library may be able to obtain the materials through interlibrary loan.)

We wish to point out that this bibliography lists only a limited number of materials. Special educators in your school and personnel from your local, intermediate, and state education agencies may be able to direct you to other excellent materials developed locally or available from commercial publishers. National, state, and local service and consumer organizations, such as those mentioned previously in this directory, are also sources of pertinent information on various handicapping conditions, on the attitudinal climate which can best promote the adjustment of handicapped students, and on new literature relevant to the teacher.

One final note -- most of the resources listed here were developed prior to the recent issuance of final regulations for Section 504 and for P. L. 94-142. A number of new publications specifically addressing the school's role in compliance with these mandates will most likely be published in the near future. To keep informed of new materials, we suggest that you place your name on the publications mailing list of national and state service and consumer organizations.

Designed for regular classroom teachers. this book concerns the minimally handicapped child. Presents an introduction to special education and the problems of the mildly handicapped child who is mentally retarded, brain injured, or emotionally disturbed. Discusses techniques to aid the teacher with student problems of self-concept, anxiety, attention, organizing, copying written material, coordination, abstract thinking, behavioral problems, and social immaturity. Also included are some additional aspects of the teacher's role such as assisting in identification, gathering information, using supportive services, participating in training programs, lesson planning, and consulting with parents. The role of the school administrator with the community is also addressed along with the obligations of teacher-training institutions in teacher preparation and cooperation with the community.
